I graduated from RMIT in 2003. Since then, I have had the benefit of practicing in various styles of Chiropractic clinics both in Victoria and Queensland. Regardless of the techniques and protocols I have witnessed remarkable results with patients . Initially to alleviate symptoms , secondly to improve function (in the absence of symptoms)and thirdly to enhance and optimise a healthy lifestyle - WELLNESS. The net affect is to reduce the reliance on an already floundering and insufficient medical system.

The Code of Professional Practice for Chiropractors is "to say the least: restrictive. It is reactive rather then proactive . As mentioned earlier, this code encourages "crisis care" . Would you wait for a child to become obese before you address their weight /health issue or would you identify the problem in its infancy and prevent it before it became a problem?

I encourage you to gain more input from practicing chiropractors throughout Australia who daily seek to correct the "cause" and not the "effect"
